

Life Support

The following is an eye opening article about environmental groups that support abortion. One way to support the pro-life cause is to NOT support these groups.

Top environmental orgs are pushing abortion...and nobody knows

Article is originally from www.lifeissues.org

Environmental activist billionaire, Tom Steyer vowed to make climate change the focus of the 2014 congressional elections, but the truth was only 3% cared about the issue. So his hired door-to-door canvassers talked about abortion and clean water.

This wasn't a coincidence. A deliberate strategy to link abortion with environmental organizations has been implemented in some regions of the green movement.

You need to know which environmental groups also push abortion . . .

The partnership between environmentalism and pro-abortion activism didn't happen overnight. In its Winter 2006 edition of Policy Review Guttmacher – itself a strongly pro-abortion entity – lamented the slowness in forming such an alliance, stating it was “a golden opportunity for advocates from the reproductive rights [abortion] and environmental justice communities to coalesce around common goals.”

In that same article, Bruce Wood, an environmentalist, welcomed the idea. “Prochoice groups have extensive experience in organizing large-scale, issue-oriented campaigns, and they could help local environmental justice activists develop research and public messaging tools...”

A recent study claims a key to countering climate change is having fewer children, and it will likely fuel their enthusiasm for abortion advocacy.

Steyer's dedication to link abortion and environmentalism has only grown. To date, he's donated over 100-million dollars to elect candidates and further like-minded organizations. Most recently he's committed two million dollars to elect Ralph Northam, a pro-abortion candidate for Virginia governor.

THANK YOU...

Thank you to Kate Blicke for putting together and donating a beautiful gift basket full of Arbonne Deluxe Products.

Thank you to Julianne Morin for donating 10 totes of new baby clothes, blanket material and seasonal baby outfits. Mommies will enjoy earning these items for a very long time.

Most pro-lifers are concerned about the environment and want to be good stewards of the planet. However, many might be giving to environmental organizations that also work to continue the legal killing of unborn babies in America and abroad.

There is overwhelming evidence that most countries are facing a population shortage, not an overabundance of people. However, that discussion is for another day.

Increasingly, environmental groups are viewing human life as the primary enemy of a pristine worldwide environment. Help spread the news that pro-lifers may be supporting green organizations that advocate for the killing of innocent human life.

The Pregnancy Support Group has seen the passing of some friends of our ministry these past few months and wish to extend our condolences to their loved ones. We will always be grateful to those that lived their lives loving on the clients of PSG and helping us at every turn. Whether through our fundraisers, financially, moving things for us, or whatever we needed, they were there to help. Charlie Bezell, a recipient of the Life Giver Award, was one of our main supporters and closest friends. We will most surely miss them all but know that they have great rewards waiting for them in heaven.
